INTRODUCTION

Childhood is a crucial stage in life. In it are built many aspects of personality relevant to the full development of human beings. Thus, the significant learning period of life that accompany these children's development throughout life course. This knowledge depends on context, social experiences and experiences of the child. Therefore, they should be taken into consideration in the educational process.

The child uses his body and movement as a way to interact with other children and with the environment, producing crops. These cultures are based on values such as playfulness, creativity and their experience of motion (Saya, 2002). In kindergarten, we understand that it is a place of discovery and acquisition of knowledge and individual experiences, cultural, social and educational interaction through the different environments in the family.

We believe therefore that physical education has an important role in early childhood education, the possibility of offering children a variety of experiences through learning situations in which the little ones have the freedom to create, invent, discover new motor movements, movements and reinvent activities that promote socialization, interaction, strengthening friendships and good social interaction with others. Moreover, it produces in children uncovered by its own limit, facing challenges, knowing and valuing their bodies and relationships with others, they feel and perceive the actions of movements and games tangible and thus express their feelings using the language body, among other situations focused on the process of intellectual, motor and affective.

Thus, the Physical Education is part of the educational programs at an early age, because the Educational Sciences have shown that early childhood is necessary to stimulate children through an organized process, systematized, and, finally, teaching motor activity. Thus, the smaller will acquire the knowledge essential for its proper development, a period that will prepare them properly for school and life. (GONZÁLEZ RODRÉGUEZ, 2008, p. 03).

In this perspective can contribute to the realization of a kindergarten, innovative, committed to the process of formation of each child and with human beings and respectful and basically, the promotion of autonomy of the child acting this way, the development of the full potential of those who lead the basis of all his experiences.

Therefore, we believe that early childhood education curriculum in line with the educational experience "can not be conceived as a mere application of rules, techniques and recipes pre-established, but as an area of shared experiences, the search for meaning, production knowledge and experimentation in action" (Sacristan, Gomes, 2002, p.86). Need for this, being ruled by a communicative action, rational and critical, that focuses on development of capacity and argumentative questioning conscious about the reality (KUNZ, 1994).

From this principle we developed our actions, in kindergarten, guided in several languages, in which the organization of the pedagogical work begins with the language that is driving the systematized observation by the teacher who catches the first movements of expression through the games of children's which demonstrate their needs and desires in search of their findings.

Emerging languages as we consider those arising from the interaction of children with language intended as the driving force that results from this dialogical meeting with the objects of organized knowledge in learning situations, proposals and projects in the bimonthly mediated, always linked to the pedagogical intentions.

This study aimed to recognize and appreciate the play of Culture childhood Paraense, in addition to various cultural events specific to children, increasing accessibility to cultural assets and providing the movements of infant language so that the traditions are not forgotten.

Thus, each child in its peculiarity has several ways of thinking, playing, talking, listening and moving through different languages which express their daily movements in their social and family life, building their children's identity.

So the children express their will through his body and actions and body movements to enable their child to learn and explore the world around you in connecting with others and with the environment.

WEAVING METHODOLOGICAL

"The movement for young children means more than moving body parts or move in space. The child expresses and communicates through gestures and facial grimacing and using interacts strongly support the body. The body size is part of the whole of the child's activity. You could say that predominates in early development of the subjective dimension motor skills, which finds its meaning and effectiveness especially in the interaction with the social environment, with people with whom the child interacts directly. The externalization of feelings, emotions and inner states may find expression in the body as a privileged resource." (BENCHMARK NATIONAL CURRICULUM FOR EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION, 1998, p. 18)

From this perspective, working with the movement can not be focused only on the physical development of children. For the child needs to nominate its movement consciously to have the opportunity to explore the environment, create new relationships relationship with your body, you know it and learn to use it beneficially, functional and intentional. (Mello, 1996)

Thus, the methodology was organized through language booster Sign Language-Body and the emerging languages of the culture, musical, intrapersonal and interpersonal, we propose a pedagogical process sung with toys, nursery rhymes, in which each child has the freedom to create and merge the traditional movements that the song needs, and rebuild new movements and strengthening contact with the friend, with songs like: slaves of Joe, Father Francisco, nursery rhymes, and other Cirandinha in full harmony with the mediation of the teacher.

In Sign Language, Body as boosting the regional dances includes the three experiments, movement, perception and observation of body movements. In addition to the dances of our region as: Chula Marajoara Cirandas, Marujada of Braganza and Lundu opportunized were moments in free and targeted.

We organize the games circuit as a reference for completing the project, where we explore various dances such as the Marujada of Braganza was conducted in which a set of movements in which the children made graceful movements, however accurate, dancing in two rows in a against another, with little steps and cars, according to the tone of the music. According to Rocha (2000), based on Vygotsky's studies, there is a direct correlation with the memory of the imagination of the social world of the child's origin. In fact the child living with singing games, game fuse body, musicianship, dance, drama and feel encouraged by the movement, music and folk traditions of our knowledgeable, less shyness, aggressiveness, and enhancing creativity, self-expression and fellowship.

In the language of culture that is already part of the child from his birth, in which we founded our path of life, our customs, dances and movements, organized research with families as an interlocutor with the musical language we expand the contacts of the body sounds while the discovery of the body, the musical genres that emerged in our nursery rhymes and toys Para socialized sung and known by the families, strengthening the language and intrapersonal and interpersonal relationships between children, family and institution, in which children expressed affection, careother and building values and feelings.

INTERIM CONSIDERATIONS

The realization of projects with several languages during the academic year 2010, leveraged acquisition important for the Unit Municipal Kindergarten Pratinha (UMEI) in all respects, for both children and teachers.

In this sense, the educator was offered courses, continuing education, which collaborated on the development of different languages in the context of early childhood education, bringing new learning to teaching practice of discovery, in which the child is the main focus in this situation learning through new readings, partnerships, organizations and planning, seeking an acquisition of knowledge enjoyable.

For children, we expand the opportunities for knowledge and knowledge of local culture, possibilities of free and autonomous actions, strengthening the importance of the guarantee of playing time as the construction and development of serious child, valuing their prior knowledge and appreciation of the ties between family, institution and community, while encouraging and supporting cultural practices of childhood.

Therefore, the mixture of cultures, languages and various motor movements in education boosts a child's development, the right to a quality education, respect and the assurance that you must have freedom, to build and create a new world of cultural inclusion, where knowledge within the reach of human beings.

Our conclusions, however provisional, show the child to know its owner and producer of knowledge, respecting the time and living each so unique and peculiar to each child.

In understanding our responsibility as educators expands, facing a new context, a circuit of several languages, involving the institution, community and family, having a commitment to the children.

This challenging new work but for our Educational Institution and all that makes up that emphasize early childhood education is being renewed, and, recognizing the various languages existing in our childhood teaching context, because those who teach, learn, enhancing the learning occurs through involvement with others and the various languages of the child, emphasizing the right of children, in their various languages and childhood, strengthening human values such as respect, friendship, offering them endless possibilities and experience rich and meaningful, for means of educational and focused on the peculiarity of the child.

During the process of MOVEMENTS CHILDREN JOKES IN "CHILDREN PAI D'EGUA", we observed the involvement of each child, the joy in every eye, winning in every new movement observed and encouraged by our pedagogical mediation, others invented by children, parental participation and responsible research on nursery rhymes, in the experience of learning situations developed in the project with nursery rhymes, dance marujada of Bragança, legends and other regional movements revelers.

These processes contributed to the development of the child, allowing them autonomy in their choices, and enhance our culture of motor movements, new playful experiences individual and collective.
